Assistant Professor Position
Division of Development Studies
Center for Economics Research and Teaching (CIDE)
Mexico City, MEXICO

The new Division of Development Studies, with - the support of the Division of Economics, @EconCIDE - seeks to hire five assistant tenure-track professors in Development Economics and Industrial Policy at its campus in Mexico City. CIDE is a social-science research institute, teaching graduate and undergraduate programs to select students in small groups. The Division of Development Studies (equivalent to a Department or school) will be the first of its kind in Latin America as it will be formed by Developmental economists, mostly focusing on Industrial Policy. The Division of Economics at CIDE is one of the leading Economics departments in Latin America, as measured by publication impact. The position offers a competitive salary with a lower-than-average teaching load. The low teaching load (1-1 or 1-0) and built in monetary incentives of these positions will allow junior scholars to focus on research activities.

Women and minorities are especially encouraged to apply. The successful candidates are required to hold a PhD by the end of 2023. While immediate fluency in Spanish is not required, two years after the appointment, the successful applicants are expected to learn basic Spanish.

Candidates should provide: (1) a short cover letter; (2) a detailed curriculum vitae; (3) a writing sample; and (4) two letters of reference. Applications should be sent to Georgina Garibay georgina.garibay@cide.edu. Review of applications will begin mid-March 2023. Employment would begin as soon as May of 2023 for available candidates and no later than August 2023.

Sincerely,

Dr. Jose Antonio Romero Tellaeche
Director General
Center for Economics Research and Teaching (CIDE)
